Care Coordination Communities

Take part in dynamic community collaborations designed to reduce readmissions and improve the coordination of care for adults over 65. Communities nationwide have already contributed to significant gains made in reducing readmissions and admissions in hospitals.

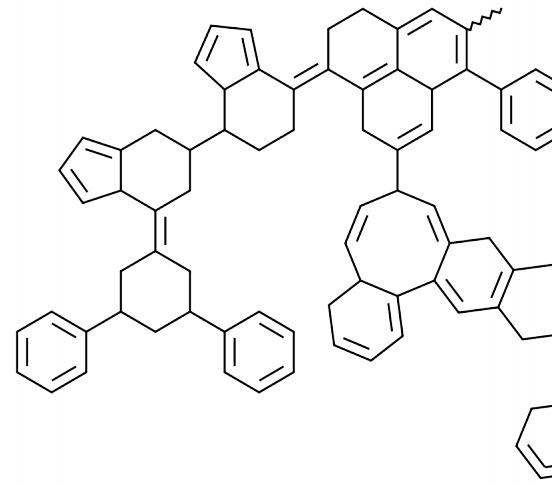

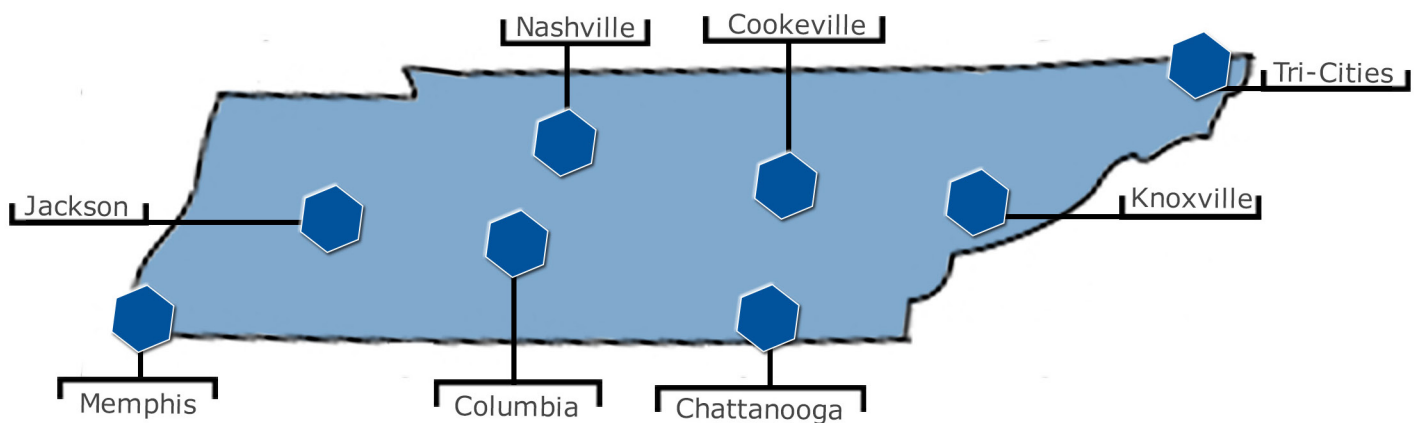

atom Alliance is continuing to unite communities with the shared, measurable goal of improving care coordination in their area.

The communities consist of:

- local providers across multiple settings
- patient advocacy organizations
- long-term services and support groups; and
- patients and families.

They meet frequently to address the needs of readmissions reduction and have first-hand access to the latest care coordination events, tools and resources. atom Alliance supports these communities by assisting with root cause analysis, engaging partners, implementing and tracking interventions and communicating successes.

Use this guide to find a community in the Tennessee area.
